THE ORGANICS
 ISSUE

Welcome to our redesigned Autumn & Winter catalogue. We heard from our readers that you want more recipes, bigger type, more beautiful pictures, and as much information about our products as we could fit on these pages. And we listened! We hope you enjoy our first larger format issue, which we've also devoted to the topic of organics—something that is near and dear to our hearts. Here, our co-owner, Shawn Donnille shares why supporting organic agriculture is a must for Mountain Rose Herbs:

Soil is founded upon a symbiotic relationship with everything around, above, and below it, and when this relationship is altered through chemical means, everything is irretrievably altered. Organic farming methods often involve more labor but take far less of a toll on the environment by soil building, crop rotation, careful harvesting, assimilation of the local environment, and composting. Conventional agricultural methods require large amounts of synthetic chemicals and fertilizers, which are directly sprayed on the crops or injected into the ground. This practice destroys the millions of life forms found in a simple handful of soil, thus stripping the land of the essential building blocks of life.

That's why in 2001 we decided to eradicate all conventionally grown herbs and spices and replace them with organically grown materials. This decision was exclusively based on our determination to conduct our business according to our ecological principles. Back then, it was a revolutionary statement that was a first for our industry.

No matter where you live, you are part of a watershed and that watershed has a name. Everything you spray, flush, discard, or dispose of enters your watershed. Much to the detriment of our environmental heritage, our watersheds are in a horrible state with all life hanging in a precarious balance. Conventional non-organic farms apply to their crops thousands of pounds of synthetic herbicides, pesticides, and chemical fertilizers and all of this will enter our watershed in the form of run-off and bio-accumulation. This seemingly simple act contaminates our rivers, lakes, and groundwater supply, thereby poisoning our fish, wildlife, and our communities. Organic farming methods do not rely on such intensive acts, and many city and county governments have encouraged organic farms to establish themselves next to waterways to protect the immediate watershed.

The beauty and splendor of the natural world is awe-inspiring for the soul, and it is the perfect balm for our health and wellbeing. This is why Mountain Rose Herbs is committed to organic agriculture. For the health of people and planet, you will never find us offering herbs or spices that are conventionally grown.

Reviving a

FORGOTTEN TEA

Growing Region

Deep in the Himalayan foothills just west of Nepal is a relatively unknown tea region: Kumaon. In the springtime, these hillsides are awash in green. Lush, vibrantly hued tea plants that smell as intoxicating as they taste, grow between stands of conifers. This is where you'll find Desmond, the manager of our certified organic Kumaon tea operations.

Cultivation began in Kumaon in the 1830s, when the British East India Company was searching for places to grow tea. They established experimental plots using Chinese seeds more than 15 years before Scottish botanist Robert Fortune's legendary saplings reached India's shores. The Camellia sinensis took well to Kumaon soils, and the plant thrived.

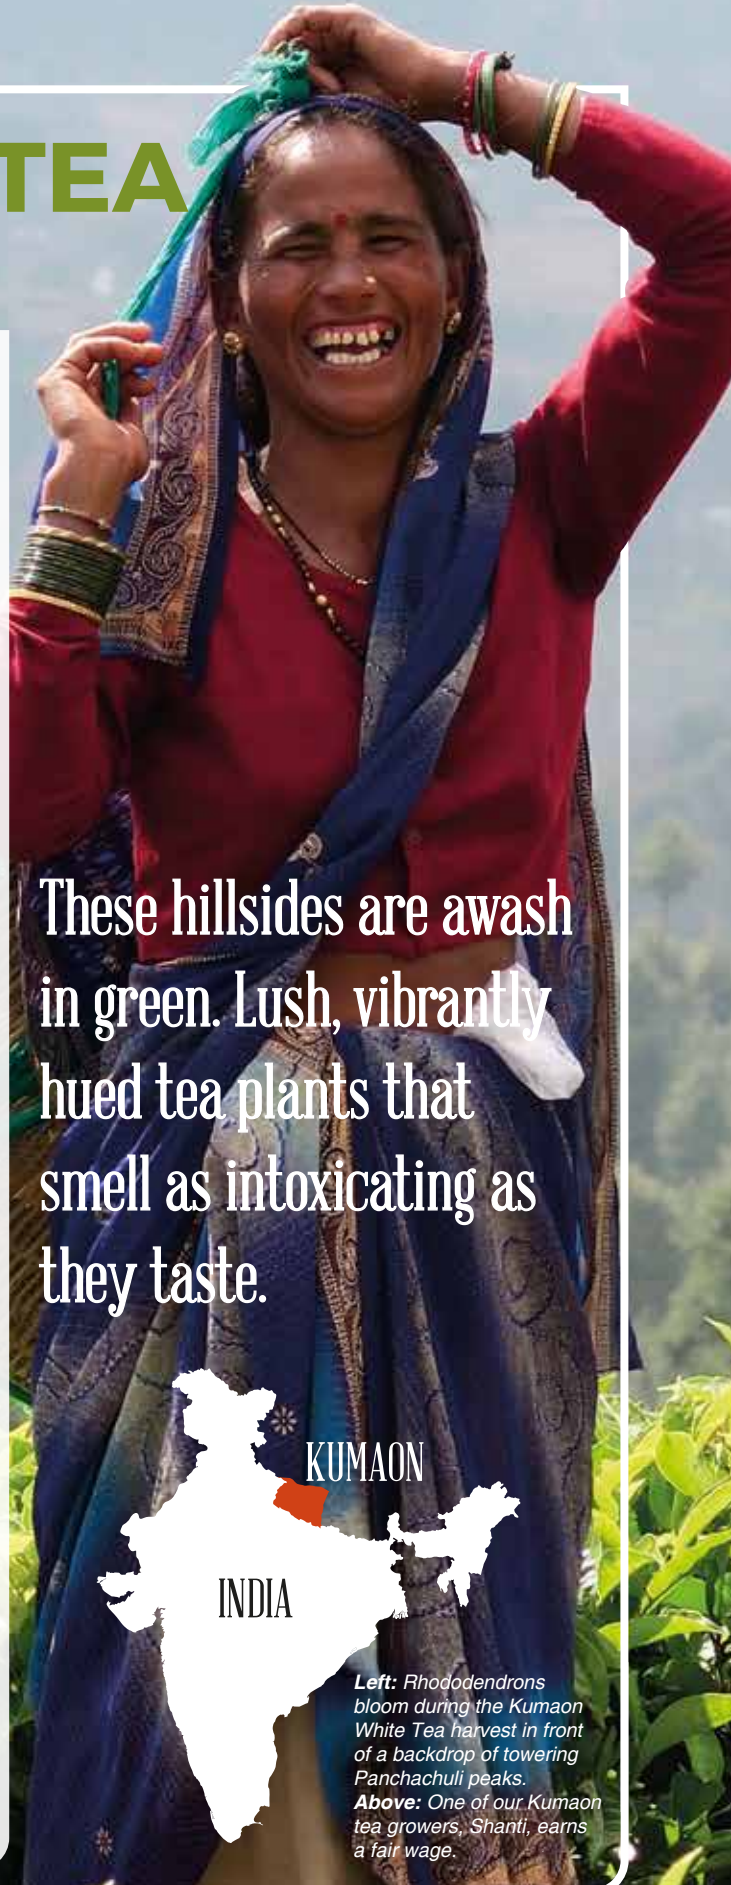

While the tea was well received, the region was challenged by its distance from ports, and a strong lobby of growers based in Calcutta kept resources flowing to Assam and Darjeeling. As a result the experimental plots were abandoned, and for 150 years the resilient tea bushes flourished, untouched in the wild.

In the 1930s, a group of six families (including Desmond's grandparents) moved from Sri Lanka to Kumaon specifically to revitalize the tea gardens there. For 70 years, those families have combatted the challenges that plagued the initial growers—extreme isolation and a lack of resources thanks to a continued focus on Darjeeling and Assam.

Then in the 1990s, the state government began a project to create rural livelihoods. After considering several other crops, they settled on tea because of its hardiness—standing up to rain and hail—and because the wild monkeys that run rampant in these Himalayan hillsides won't steal its fruit.

Today, Desmond oversees a sustainable model for tea production that brings much-needed work to the villagers. We are pleased to offer this certified organic tea. It not only provides economic opportunities for the people in this isolated area, but it also has a unique and delicate honeydew flavor that our tea tasters absolutely love!

These hillsides are awash in green. Lush, vibrantly hued tea plants that smell as intoxicating as they taste.

RASPBERRY LEAF TEA

This recipe creates 4 oz. of tea blend.

Raspberry leaf has traditionally been used as a nourishing tonic. It is a balanced herb for everyone of any age thanks to its mildly sweet flavor reminiscent of black tea but without all of the caffeine.

Julie DeBord, our Production Manager who oversees the recipes for our tea and spice blends, loves how this herb is easy on the tummy. This recipe is based on a blend she made during her pregnancy years ago. In this blend, Julie pairs the raspberry leaf with other nutritive herbs like nettle and rosehips—a great and tasty way to take your vitamins!

Ingredients

1 1/2 oz. organic raspberry leaf*

1 oz. organic nettle leaf*

1/2 oz. organic rosehips*

1/2 oz. organic hibiscus flowers*

1/2 oz. organic dried orange peel*

Directions

Blend all ingredients together. Place 1-3 teaspoons of the blend in a tea strainer, Tea-To-Go Infuser, or other tea accessory of choice. Pour freshly boiled water over the blend and let steep covered for at least 5 minutes, or longer to taste. This blend is also wonderful iced!

Measuring Tip

One of the most helpful tools for home tea blending is a small kitchen scale. Measuring herbs by weight instead of volume enables you to maintain the integrity of the blend. If you don't have a scale on hand, you can always order our 1 oz. sizes to help you estimate more accurately.

PUMPKIN PIE SPICE OLD FASHIONED

This spice blend also makes a delectable addition to a classic Old Fashioned cocktail. While any sweetener and pre-made bitters will do, we've made our recipe extra special by swapping out the traditional sugar with a simple syrup infused with our Love Tea and homemade bitters. Both recipes can be found on our blog: blog.mountainroseherbs.com.

Ingredients

- 1 tsp Love Tea* simple syrup
- 2 oz. bourbon
- 4 droppers of orange* cardamom* bitters
- 2-4 dashes of organic Pumpkin Pie Spice*
- 1 organic orange
- 1 organic cinnamon stick*

Directions

Add simple syrup, bitters, bourbon, and pumpkin pie spice in the bottom of a double Old Fashioned glass. Stir until combined. Peel one large strip of orange zest using a vegetable peeler and twist the peel over the glass, releasing its oils. Wipe the pith-side of the peel around the rim and toss into the glass. Put desired amount of ice in the glass and garnish with a cinnamon stick and orange wedge.

Looking for a mocktail instead of a cocktail? Swap out the bourbon for one part non-alcoholic vanilla extract and two parts sparkling water.

MICROGREENS SALAD WITH FENNEL POLLEN

Sprouted seeds make it possible to enjoy fresh greenery on your dinner table year-round! We especially like consuming these beautiful microgreens when our gardens are barren and local farmers markets are closed for the season. They take less than a week to sprout and are so simple to grow! Paired with our fragrant fennel pollen and other tummy-friendly veggies, this zesty salad is delicious on its own, atop a bed of mixed greens, or mixed into a bowl of cooked quinoa. Serves 2.

What Quality MEANS TO US

When we ask customers why they choose Mountain Rose Herbs, “quality” pops to the top of the list. It’s a proud moment to realize our relentless quest for the best organic botanicals is something you value too. That’s why we recently sat down with Steven Yeager, our Quality Assurance & Quality Control Director, to find out what he and his lab coat-wearing team do behind the closed doors of our in-house lab—the epicenter of quality here at Mountain Rose Herbs.

Mountain Rose Herbs (MRH): Why is quality so important?

Steven: It’s the foundation of what we do here. A lot of us are herbalists, and we refuse to sell products that we wouldn’t want to use ourselves. We expect our offerings to be safe and effective, and we know our customers do too. A good end product relies on starting with high-quality ingredients.

MRH: Why do we have an in-house quality control lab?

Steven: While it was a big undertaking to initially fund the lab over a decade ago, it’s been well worth it and has really reduced our testing costs over time. And lower costs for us mean safe, quality products at a lower price for our customers! Many companies similar to ours don’t have in-house labs and send their products to third-parties for testing. Our 10 lab staffers are constantly testing our ingredients to ensure they meet our strict specifications and are free from adulterants and contamination.

MRH: What’s new in the lab?

Steven: We just implemented a new testing technology called Gas Chromatography Mass Spectroscopy (GCMS). It will give us the ability to test the identity of our essential oils, which is something we’ve had to rely on third-parties for in the past. By using this technology, we’ll be able to verify that the constituents of the essential oil are what they should be. For example, in peppermint essential oil, we look for a specific level of menthol, and that’s a marker of whether it’s a quality product. Most essential oil companies aren’t doing this level of testing; they just base decisions off good faith agreements. And while we have great relationships with those who craft our essential oils, we still like to make sure we provide the purest form of the oils possible. We take our testing a step further than most other companies because we want to offer only the best.

MRH: How does our commitment to quality impact the number of products that may be out of stock?

Steven: Some may have noticed that we run out of botanicals from time to time. A lot of that is a direct result of our obsession with quality. We’d rather lose business than sell our customers inferior products. Most of our testing goes unnoticed. Customers just expect a good product, and it’s our job to deliver!

“It’s the foundation of what we do here. A lot of us are herbalists, and we refuse to sell products that we wouldn’t want to use ourselves.”

-Steven Yeager, QA/QC Director

Preserving Our Planet Through ORGANIC AGRICULTURE

While we're passionate about organic agriculture for many reasons, did you know growing organically can reduce greenhouse gases in the atmosphere? Food production accounts for 25% of global greenhouse gas emissions,* so supporting organic agriculture is more important now than ever.

To be considered organic, a farm can't use the fossil-fuel intensive synthetic fertilizers and pesticides that conventional agriculture relies upon. Organic growers are also required to practice environmentally friendly strategies like crop rotation and soil-building. Per acre of crop production, organic farms have lower nitrous oxide emissions (a greenhouse gas 300 times stronger than carbon dioxide) when compared with conventional.*

You can find our certified organic farms throughout US, but we also grow many of our beloved plant allies abroad. On the other side of the globe, high in the Aydin Mountains on the western edge of Turkey, lies one of our organic farms. In this ancient agricultural land vitex shrubs grow alongside creek beds, their spikes of purple flowers giving way to our vitex berries, which are hand-harvested every September.

Our head farmer, Yavuz, who oversees the cultivation and wildharvesting of many of herbs, was the first to grow organically in Turkey 20 years ago and happened upon it by accident. Decades ago while surfing the Internet, he mistyped some of the letters in "oregano origanum." Instead of seeing info on oregano, his monitor displayed search results for "organic."

"What can I say?" Yavuz said. "It is a fate that changed the lives of our family and workers."

Since then, Yavuz and his family have worked tirelessly to educate Turkish farmers about the dangers of applying insecticides and pesticides, and they have given the people in their region skills for sustainable collection practices and protected our stands against chemical drift.

We give thanks to Yavuz's family and the many skilled hands that work to provide our organic botanicals. Supporting organic agriculture is one way we can all play a part in preserving Mother Earth for generations to come.

Why Organic BODY CARE MATTERS

With the considerable focus placed on diet nowadays, it may be easy to forget that skin is our largest organ and needs plenty of attention too. Our pores actually absorb whatever we put on them! In fact, a recent study led by researchers in California demonstrated that even a short break from the synthetic chemicals widely used in the personal care industry (like phthalates, parabens, triclosan, and oxybenzone) can quickly reduce levels of hormone-disrupting chemicals in the body.* Furthermore, the researchers noted that because women in general tend to use more personal care products, they are at higher risk for exposure to unhealthy ingredients.

Thankfully, the organic botanical world so generously provides an abundance of soothing, healthy, and naturally aromatic butters, oils, and powders that we can use directly on our body, hair, and skin. Mountain Rose Herbs has a wide selection of these organic ingredients to make crafting your own body care accessible and easy. It can be an empowering experience to customize to your preferences, experiment with different combinations, and maybe even skip the personal care aisle in the store altogether! The cleanest label you can find is the label you make yourself.

We care about organics at Mountain Rose Herbs because we understand that life and our planet are precious. What we put on ourselves and our loved ones is one way to maintain our health and wellness. The richness of mango butter in a lotion bar, the lightness of a cucumber hydrosol on our face, and the shine of argan oil on our hair is enough proof to us that nature has gotten body care just right.

Gift Ideas From Our RECIPE ARCHIVES

Back in 1991, Julie Bailey purchased a small mail order company while living in southern Humboldt, California. Before it became the Mountain Rose Herbs we know today, it was renowned herbalist Rosemary Gladstar's business, which provided class supplies to her herbal students. Very much like a seed, the company was transformed to full bloom with Julie's care. Over the years, she has tended many parts of the Mountain Rose Herbs "garden"—formulating products, handling finances, designing our catalogue, overseeing executive management, and so much more! Julie is our grounding pragmatist, keeping us rooted every step of the way.

Recently, we discovered an old notebook brimming with some of our recipes from the past and took a wonderful trip back to our beginnings with Julie—while sipping tea of course! Worked and reworked formulations on pages scribbled with notes were the start of Mountain Rose Herbs' first product line. Many of the notebook's recipes are still customer favorites, but as could be expected, we found some gems hiding in this nostalgic pile of papers. And we just can't help but share our favorites with you!

Queen of Hungary's Water

An original formulation no longer offered in the Mountain Rose Herbs line, this traditional recipe has a mysterious folkloric origin. One popular legend suggests it was an alchemist's creation for the Queen of Hungary to restore her youth. Some say it was the first recorded perfume. It is still beloved to this day, as its pleasing aroma continues to delight.

Ingredients

4 parts organic lemon balm*

3 parts organic calendula flowers*

3 parts organic chamomile flowers*

3 parts organic lavender flowers*

1 part organic orange peel*

1 part organic rosemary*

Liquid menstruum of high-proof vodka, organic apple cider vinegar, or organic red wine vinegar

Organic witch hazel extract*

Organic rose hydrosol*

Directions

Place dried herbs in a large glass jar. Cover with menstruum until it rests one to two inches above the herbs. If lid is metal, place parchment paper over the mouth of the jar before putting the lid on it. Legend suggests infusing at the new moon and straining at the full moon. If that is not possible, then let sit for 2-4 weeks in a warm, dry place. Agitate or shake jar daily. And be sure to add more menstruum to the jar as the herbs swell. They should always be covered by liquid. Strain mixture through cheesecloth or muslin and set aside. In another glass container, add equal parts strained menstruum, witch hazel extract, and rose hydrosol. Use as a splash or spray for skin and hair.

"You don't have to be a chef to make amazing things in the kitchen or an herbalist to make botanical creations. With simple recipes and common herbs, we hope to provide everything you need to craft healthy, affordable, and organic creations your loved ones will cherish."

-Julie Bailey, co-owner at Mountain Rose Herbs

From Farm TO BOTTLE

When the fresh turmeric arrived at our new extract-processing facility, we were elated. Its vibrant, orange roots had an intoxicatingly sweet and spicy scent, distinctive to this beloved plant. These beautiful rhizomes had been in the ground less than a week prior, making them some of the plumpest we'd seen.

While we've been working with dried herbs for decades, the delivery of fresh roots was a novelty. It wasn't until early 2017, when we acquired the assets of Terra Firma Botanicals, that we had a reason to work with fresh turmeric. River Kennedy, our neighbor in Eugene, Oregon and Terra Firma's founder, was an expert formulator and one of our longtime suppliers. When it became clear that her time on this planet was coming to an end, River asked if we could keep her company's time-tested recipes alive and her team employed. We, of course, said "yes"! River's daughter, Shay, still oversees the production of these herbal extracts, elixirs, and syrups, now offered under the Mountain Rose Herbs brand.

In early summer we visited Dean on Hawaii's Big Island, where he grows the certified organic turmeric and ginger used in our single and combination extracts. Nestled between a lychee orchard and unfarmed jungle, the turmeric sprouts were nearly a foot tall. But by fall's harvest, the plants will have shot up six feet. When Dean pulls each plant by hand this fall (he does nearly everything by hand to ensure the highest quality), the roots will be the size of a basketball, their gnarled root "fingers" entwined. He will then hand wash each rhizome before shipping to us, where we test and process the turmeric within days of harvest.

A seasoned turmeric grower (he's been farming the plant for 37 years), Dean switched to organic cultivation in 1995. "I got tired of eating pesticides," he said.

While over 60% of our herbal extracts are certified organic thanks to growers like Dean, we're committed to formulating a 100% organic extract line over the coming years. From field to bottle, we are honored to carry on the tradition River started, offering fresh high-quality organic or sustainably harvested tinctured botanicals.

Dean switched to organic cultivation in 1995. "I got tired of eating pesticides."

CITRUS HOLIDAY RECIPES

Featured Blogger

Mountain Rose Herbs partners with bloggers across the country who love our herbal goodies. While Christina regularly shares her affection for our offerings with her readers, we thought we'd return the favor. Enjoy!

Christina Anthis is the hippy behind the blog thehippyhomemaker.com. Christina writes about green and eco-friendly living, aromatherapy, herbalism, holistic health, and natural beauty. Why do organics matter to her? "Making healthier choices has become the driving force behind the easy decision to support companies like Mountain Rose Herbs that are working to make their products free from pesticides and GMOs," she said. "Ultimately, going organic is the best way to achieve both, since a product can't be certified organic if it's genetically modified or cultivated with chemicals!"

My favorite organic recipe gift ideas

This time of year, I'm always looking for things to make that I enjoy at home but that also make great gifts. While anyone can buy chemical-laden products at the store, my friends and family tell me they eagerly await opening up something chemical-free and handmade by me. Here are some of my favorite organic body care recipes using comforting holiday aromas such as cloves, orange, and cocoa butter:

Citrus & Spice Essential Oil Blend

Ingredients

- 30 drops organic sweet orange essential oil*
- 10 drops organic cinnamon leaf essential oil*
- 10 drops organic fresh ginger essential oil*

Directions

Add essential oils to an empty glass bottle and gently swirl to combine. Store in a cool, dark place when not in use. Add 8-10 drops of this blend to your diffuser to transform any space. Or add 6-12 drops (1-2% dilution) to 1 oz. of carrier oil for a wonderful holiday-scented moisturizer.

My favorite recycled gift wrap

What good are homemade organic body care gifts without equally eco-friendly wrapping? I like to turn paper grocery bags into gift wrap that my kiddo and I can color, paint, and stamp all over. We like to tailor the decorations on each wrap to the person that we are giving them to. It's a fun tradition for me and my son, and the family members receiving our gifts always look forward to the art we have created just for them!

Chocolate Covered Orange Lip Butter

Ingredients

3 Tbsp organic unrefined coconut oil*
1 Tbsp organic non-GMO cocoa butter*
1 1/2 Tbsp beeswax pastilles*
1 tsp organic roasted cacao powder*
30 drops organic sweet orange essential oil*

Directions

In a double boiler, gently melt the coconut oil, cocoa butter, beeswax, and cacao powder. Once melted, remove from heat and stir in essential oil. Pour into lip balm tubes or tins and allow to cool before putting caps or lids onto containers. Label and enjoy!

Oranges & Clove Sugar Scrub

Ingredients

1 cup organic cane sugar
Zest of 1 organic orange (or dried organic orange peel powder*)
1 tsp organic clove powder*
1/4 cup organic unrefined coconut oil*
2 Tbsp organic non-GMO unscented castille soap*
20 drops organic sweet orange essential oil*

Directions

In a medium bowl, combine sugar, orange zest or powder, and clove powder and set aside. Over low heat, gently melt the coconut oil. Remove from heat and stir in castille soap and essential oil. Pour coconut oil mixture over the sugar mixture and stir until completely combined. Store in a glass jar in a cool, dark location. To use, scoop out enough sugar scrub to exfoliate the intended area. Rinse with warm water and repeat everywhere that needs a good scrub. Avoid getting water in the jar to prevent mold and bacterial growth. And if using in the tub, remember oil-based scrubs can make the tub slippery!
